In this pertinent book by Janice Thomas et al., the authors report the results of their research on this topic. Phase II is addressed in the context of eight models, where the success factors are compared and contrasted. The eight models the authors describe are: -- General selling base model -- Very successful selling base model -- Project personnel selling model -- Very Successful project personnel selling model -- Consultant selling model -- Very successful consultant selling model -- Very unsuccessful selling model -- Senior executive model In each case, parameters that were explored are reported and those that exhibit a statistically significant explanation are highlighted.

In The Type B Manager, Victor Lipman offers a unique lens through which to view the challenging problems of management. While management has long been considered the realm of Type A individuals—hard-driving, competitive high achievers—all too often these high-intensity traits aren't effective when it comes to motivating your employees. Many characteristics of Type B individuals—being more relaxed, less competitive, more reflective, slower to anger—can be considered “people skills” that better influence motivation and productivity. And successful management after all is the practice of accomplishing work through other people. In a business landscape where 70 percent of employees are disengaged and not working at full productive capacity, Lipman focuses on practical tactical aspects of management viewed through a Type B lens, including: · Motivating and developing employees · Handling conflict, and · Engendering trust and respect He examines specific skills, behaviors, and situations where a Type B mindset is advantageous and suggests ways that self-described Type A managers can boost their effectiveness by adopting Type B approaches—and vice versa.
